EXCITING NEW DAYLILIES

Relax in the hot summer days and enjoy the colorful new Daylilies. The Daylilies will take care of themselves and new flowers will open each day. Daylilies have become America's fastest growing hobby flower. Because of the astounding new colors to be had with the least amount of effort, the flower hobbyists are pushing their former favorite plants to the rear of their garden in favor of the exciting new, beautifully formed Daylilies. Daylilies are tough — they can be grown in any good garden soil and tolerate all sorts of weather conditions. In fact, they can be grown in any State of the United States.

CULTURE

Daylilies should be planted with crown of plant one inch beneath soil surface, in a sunny location and a well drained soil. The soil should be supplied with plenty of organic matter, such as Oak leaf-mold, Peat or well-rotted cow manure. A good soil should be 5% organic. I maintain my soil at a Ph. 5.8 and use Limestone or Agriculture Gypsum 3 to 5 pounds to 100 square feet in the Fall and Spring, because I have a well drained soil with rapid leaching. When applying Limestone, it must be kept in mind that you are raising the essential calcium and not the Ph. of the soil. The higher the Ph. the quicker the organic matter is destroyed by soil bacteria.

When planting, add a handful of Bonemeal or Superphosphate. This will not burn the root tissues and will supply the essential Phosphorous and calcium which is needed for the development of the seed and maturity of the root system. Daylilies do not require much nitrogen, so that each spring I apply 2 pounds of 2-10-10 fertilizer to 100 square feet. Too much nitrogen added to the soil will produce too high a flowering scape, and will lessen the good color and substance of the Daylily flower. The high Potassium content will give good plant vigor. A thorough soaking with a lawn sprinkler once each week when the flower buds appear will well repay you with large rich flowers. In short, to get the most out of your Daylilies, plant them in an organic soil and give them plenty of water. Remember, the soil must be well drained.
